Tercero is home to about 2400 students each academic year. Tercero's residence halls are arranged into four neighborhoods: Kearney and Laben Halls; Wall, Campbell and Potter Halls; the 7 buildings north of the Tercero Services Center; and Cottonwood, Madrone and Redwood Halls plus a community resources building, Olive Hall. Well-designed grounds feature several lawns, an assortment of trees and groundscape, and seating areas for students to hang out. The lawns surrounding the Tercero Services Center are perfect for throwing around a ball or frisbie, or just laying in the sun. Residence Halls Dining The Tercero Dining Commons is located on the second floor of the Tercero Services Center, which is located in the center of the Tercero residence hall area. Tercero DC is open to all residence hall students and is open during the same meal periods as Segundo DC and Cuarto DC. Tercero residents typically eat most of their meals at the Tercero DC due to its central location, though all residence hall students may eat in any of the three DCs for any meal. Tercero Market is the Tercero area's convenience store. Residents can purchase drinks, snacks and more at Tercero Market throughout the day and evening, and relax on the outdoor patio. Services Services in Tercero are provided at the Tercero Services Center. The Area Service Desk is located on the first floor of the center, directly across from the area mailboxes. The Residential Academic Center is located next to the Area Service Desk, and the Computer Center is located just down the hallway. A games/recreation room, multiple lounges, and lots of study space are also available in the center. Advantages to Living in Tercero Cannot decide which housing area is best? Sequoia sempervirens, California redwood California's majestic redwoods invoke a sense of place and of peace. California coastal redwoods reach for the clouds and grow for hundreds of years. Limited to narrow portions of California's diverse ecosystem, redwoods thrive in a summer fog belt and need many inches of natural rainfall to survive. Redwood trees provide habitat for mammals, birds and amphibians. California's nearly 150,000 acres of redwood groves draw visitors from around the globe. One of the most photographed areas of the UC Davis campus is the Arboretum's T. Elliot Weir Redwood Grove, home to one of the largest collections of coast redwood trees outside their native range. For more information visit the UC Davis Arboretum gardens webpage. Information about sequoias (California redwoods) is provided by the UC Davis Arboretum. Please stay in touch! Ribes spp, California currant California's currant species thrive in the multi-varied environments of California. These show-stopping shrubs are loved by birds for their delicious fruit, by insects and hummingbirds for their sweet winter nectar, and by humans for their fragrant leaves and rainy season flowers. Currants are found throughout the campus landscapes. In the Arboretum they are found hanging out in shade of their taller neighbors. The species featured in the photo, called the chaparral currant, Ribes malvaceum, loses its leaves but emerges in winter with eye-catching, chandelier-like flowers. Chaparral currants are easy to find in the Arboretum's Mary Wattis Brown Garden of California Native Plants. For more information visit the UC Davis Arboretum gardens webpage.
